EDITOR'S NOTE BY JAN SWAN:

I was recently reading about the history of mural art and its relationship to political activism. One mural artist in Mexico, Enrique Chiu, worked with almost 4,000 volunteers to paint messages of peace and beauty on the Mexican side of the US border wall. This was done in response to the former US president's nasty pledge to build a "big, beautiful wall" between the two countries. In that dark period of our recent history, about 400 miles of wall were built along the 1,954 miles of border. One side of that wall represents the best of human endeavors, art, while the other side represents the worst of humanity, hate. I choose art.
